THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1905.

The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending Saturday was copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

3,400

For a really, truly hot one this day compares quite favorably.

There wouldn't be any excitement in wagering on the outcome of a possible encounter between Oyama and Linévitch.

The wives of Vermont farmers should not envy those New York women who are making a tour of Vermont and New Hampshire on a farmer's wagon; they can mount the hayrack any day. Furthermore, they can clamber to the seat of the horse-rake, and journey up and down the fields.

To our contemporary in Morrisville, The News and Citizen, we give credit for making a good guess. It says: "Barre is taking a little pride just now in the fact that it is almost as big as Rutland, the latter city having only forty-two more polls than Barre, and is strongly of the opinion that the census will place that city second in Vermont. Well, we guess it will; Barre has got the rocks to do it with."

SOMETHING FORGOTTEN.

An observing lad passing along a Barre street yesterday saw a small American flag displayed. The display struck him as peculiar, as he knew of no holiday, and he applied to his companion for a solution of the problem. The boy companion couldn't solve the mystery. Probably if the boys had applied to the greater number of the people of the city the significance of the showing of the flag would not have been revealed, for few people know that 128 years ago yesterday Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the national emblem. So the fourteenth day of June has come to be known as Flag Day. It is not a national holiday, nor is it a state holiday except in Connecticut, proclaimed by the governor. The words of the resolve by Congress, which made the Stars and Stripes the national emblem are: "That the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, in a blue field, representing a new constellation." The thirteen stripes are still to be seen on the flag, but the thirteen stars have had to be reduced in size and multiplied as the number of states admitted to the union has grown in the more than a century history of the country. This change was authorized in 1812 by Congress. Yet the flag retains its identity, and is essentially the same flag as that adopted by the national government in 1777. Betsey Ross of Philadelphia, so the story goes, sewed together the original banner, and it is also said that the same woman made the flags for the government for a long time after the adoption of the design, and that the privilege was inherited by her daughter who finally gave it up at the request of the Society of Friends, to which she belonged, because the flag might be used in connection with war.

The Times is pleased to note that the significance of the day was recognized, in a small way at least, by one Barre citizen. Probably there were other instances which were not brought to our attention. Flag Day should have a deep meaning for all of us.

OUR NATIONAL GAME.

Tell me not in mournful numbers
 Hard luck is but an idle dream;
 For the team that wins is lucky
 And the game ain't what it seems.

In the diamond's field of battle,
 In the bivouac and strife,
 You can look out for death's rattle
 In the very midst of life.
 —From the Doggerels of Dale.

Carefully Led Up to.

"Yonder," said the party of the first part, "is the house in which I was born. We lived on the first floor. McBooth Pantington, the great tragedian, occupied the upper apartments. He was not only a famous actor, but a singularly fortunate man."

"Then," responded the party of the second part, "you were born under a lucky star, eh?"
 N. B.—The management begs to state that it considers this one of the most elaborately worked out jokes we have produced this season.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

True Philosopher.

"Lightning set your barn on fire?"
 "Yes."
 "Thunder shook yer house down?"
 "That's what."
 "Well, how do you feel about it?"
 "Thankful that there's still left enough land on which to shout halloo!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Breakfast Table Repartee.

"Will somebody please chase the cow down this way?" said the funny boarder who wanted some milk for his coffee. "Here, Jane," said the landlady ironically, "take the cow down to where the calf is bawling."—Kansas City Journal.

Snappy Talk.

Miss Anteck (in open trolley car)—Are you going to stop smoking? You must see how it annoys me.
 Mr. Weed—But, madam, these seats are reserved for smokers.
 Miss Anteck (scornfully)—You're a gentleman, I must say!
 Mr. Weed—And you, madam, are not, I regret to say.—Philadelphia Press.

Twere Better So.

Stewart Edward White, the author, lost some money recently through the failure of a trust company.
 In Santa Barbara one day he was introduced to an interesting young man from New York.
 "What does that young man do?" Mr. White asked on the stranger's departure.
 "He is attached to the Commercial Bank," was the reply.
 "Ah," said Mr. White, "so they attach them now do they? It's not a bad idea."—Cincinnati Inquirer.

PRETTY LITTLE GRADUATE.

Sweetest of all earthly things,
 Filled with high imaginings,
 Pretty little graduate,
 It is good to see you stand
 With your essay in your hand,
 Telling how your native land
 Should be ruled and should be run;
 With your sweetness which is great
 You have wisdom by the ton,
 Pretty little graduate.

Decked with lace and fluffs and bows
 From your proud head to your toes,
 Pretty little graduate,
 You're a picture of delight
 As you stand there pink and white,
 And I'd gladly, if I might,
 Toss down at your dainty feet
 All the richest blessings Fate
 Has for those she favors most,
 Pretty little graduate.

There your mother, glad and proud,
 Sits and listens, with the crowd,
 Pretty little graduate;
 Do you guess or do you know
 Why her tear ducts overflow?
 Back her lively fancies go
 To the time when she herself,
 All beribboned and elate,
 Was sweet seventeen and a
 Pretty little graduate.

Sweetest of all earthly things,
 Filled with high imaginings,
 Pretty little graduate,
 Hear my wish: That all your days
 You may walk in flowery ways,
 Hearing only words of praise,
 Ever keeping your young heart
 Filled with love and free from hate,
 Never knowing sorrow's smart,
 Pretty little graduate.

SOUTH RYEGATE.

Charles Eliason is breaking ground for his new house on River street and we hope he will be able to winter in new quarters.

Real estate deals are on. We hear that George H. Robin has sold his new house to a Mr. Paine of Melndoes. Mr. Paine is bookkeeper for M. H. Gibson and wants to move his family here and as there are no tenements, he desired to buy.

E. G. Lind has purchased of Sam Mills a strip of land on Pleasant street and it is reported that he will erect three if not four houses as soon as convenient. We hope this news is true, as there is much need of such enterprise and Mr. Lind seems to be the only man in town who has the two necessary elements, namely, money and courage. The investment will be a paying one if put through.

The funeral services of James Buchanan were held at the Presbyterian church in this village last Monday afternoon and there was a large attendance of friends and relatives to pay their last respects to one who was born in this village and spent his boyhood days here. Jim, as he was called, was the youngest son of the late Walter Buchanan. He married Miss Belle Gray of Ryegate and is survived by her and three children. He had been in poor health for several years, but was full of Scotch grit and kept about as long as possible. He had lived at Ryegate Corner for the past few years. He was highly respected by everybody who knew him. The Masonic Order from the Wells River Lodge, of which he was a member, was here in a body and took charge at the grave.

There is considerable excitement in town concerning an unpleasant affair that took place on Jefferson Hill between Jennett Lumsden and her neighbors, Thomas Longmoore, George Lackie and some others. The trouble was over a line fence and it is reported that Jennett Lumsden opposed their building a fence and they were obliged to take hold of her by force and hold her in order to proceed with the work, she stoning and scratching them. She and her friends claim she was roughly handled and that she carries many bruises and marks from the result of the affair. The writer is not well posted on the case, so is not able to take sides in the matter, but we hear all sorts of stories and to say the least it is an unpleasant affair and will not be recorded in history as a red letter day for the Battle of Jefferson Hill.

A Difference of Opinion.

"Do the Russians still insist they are not beaten?" said one Japanese officer.
 "They do," replied the other.
 "Well, they are about as well informed on that point as they are on some other matters pertaining to modern warfare."
